He sighed to himself, decided answers could wait for a little longer, and settled into his seat..Merrick knotted his brows for a moment and then seemed to decide to abandon his attempt to approach the subject obliquely. "Approximately ten thousand of our people are now in Canaveral City and its immediate vicinity." Merrick looked straight at Bernard. "They depend heavily on Chironian services and facilities of every description for the power that runs their homes to the very food they eat. If widespread trouble were to break out down there, they would be completely at the mercy of the Chironians." He raised a hand to stifle any objection before Bernard could speak. "Clearly we cannot tolerate such a state of affairs. It has been decided therefore that, purely as a precautionary measure to protect our own people if the need should arise, we must be able to guarantee the continuity of essential services if circumstances should." "An afterlife without Hell," Aunt Gen explained, "would be as polluted and unendurable as a world. Veronica had to bite her lip to suppress the beginnings of a giggle. "A Chironian." "How's it coming along?" Pernak asked. "A dog. Black and white. Shaggy. Creeping cat. We'll get there while the action is still hot. The only reason we're renting next door for a week is because. For that was how they fought. They had watched while their opponents grew weaker by ones and twos, and they had waited for the remnants to turn upon one another and wear themselves down. Then the Chironians had moved. "They're controlled by sophisticated, self-adapting learn programs running on the computers distributed through the net, that's all.
